What could be more romantic than you, your new spouse, and a bunch of secluded beaches? There's literally no better way to celebrate your nuptials than by checking into a remote private-island resort designed to indulge all of your tropical fantasies.

Depending on how isolated it is, getting to your private island honeymoon may not be easy (or cheap), but once there, most offer an all-inclusive price structure for meals (since there's nowhere else to drink and eat) and loads of activities, from horseback riding to sunset sails. If you're worried that you and your new spouse might get bored, pack some games and books to keep busy. Or get your scuba diving certification and explore a new underwater world. No matter how remote the resort is, you won't be completely cut off from the world; every place has internet access, so you can still check in here and there and know that everything is okay back home.

If it's sustainable barefoot luxury you're after, then look no further than this breathtaking private island retreat, located a scenic 45-minute helicopter ride from Fiji's Nadi International Airport.

Each of the twenty-one villas offers its own pool, private walled garden, and beach access (there are also five Hilltop Luxury Residences more suited to multi-generational groups—for a honeymoon, the beachfront villas are more than enough).

The Great Astrolabe Reef, the fourth largest in the world, is located just a few miles offshore, and the resort can easily arrange diving or snorkeling excursions. But not only does Kokomo offer the luxurious villas and exciting adventures one would expect from a private island resort—they take their food extremely seriously, as well.

The island boasts a 5.5-acre organic farm (providing everything from tropical fruits to zucchini, herbs, lettuces, tomatoes and more), making for a farm-to-table experience you're unlikely to find at other resorts. The resort also sources "Dock To Dish" certified sustainable seafood from small-scale, local, and indigenous fishermen.
