

Private Islands Working in Harmony with Nature

Private island resorts are often situated in the most beautiful habitats on Earth.

Coming in all shapes and sizes, private islands are easily one of the most luxurious destinations in the world. Not only do private islands offer privacy and security, but they are also often exclusive – with only a handful of properties built on the island – and situated in the most beautiful habitats on Earth.

However, being surrounded by potentially fragile or endangered flora and fauna comes with a huge amount of responsibility. It's imperative that private island resorts become stewards for the landscapes they call home and put sustainability at the heart of their practices, which is why we're showcasing a range of private islands that prove luxury and environmental responsibility can go hand in hand.

Kokomo Private Island Resort, Fiji

Viewed as one of the most exclusive private island resorts in the world, the ultra-luxe 'seven star' Kokomo Island Fiji comprises five beautiful residences and 21 villas across 140 acres of idyllic, untouched landscape. On the island, guests are free to do as much or as little as they wish, whether this includes diving on the Great Astrolabe Reef – the world's fourth-largest reef, which surrounds the island – and surfing or yoga on the beach and visits to the hidden Kadavu waterfalls.

At Kokomo Island Fiji, the luxurious offerings are also balanced with a strong commitment to sustainability – the resort has recently joined eco-friendly hotel group, Regenerative Travel. Ocean preservation is at the forefront of Kokomo Island's green practices, with the resort having its own team of marine biologists that lead a range of projects including coral restoration and manta ray conservation. The resort's design also focused on minimizing its impact on the environment; the villas and residences have been inspired by Fijian culture and use natural materials throughout.
